According to the Weibo user, who goes by the handle Gong Zheng Ah Gong Zheng, a Japanese student showed Taiwan's flag in a PowerPoint slide that stated "Taiwan is a country" during a team presentation on Oct. 21.

In the video, the shadow of a student's hand can be seen blocking the projector to cover the Taiwan flag. Chinese students can also be heard booing and shouting "Taiwan is a part of China." The Weibo user bragged about his actions against the Japanese student.

The Chinese students can disagree with the presentation and share their constructive criticism during the time for feedback, but to block a presentation of another student in a university that provides academic freedom to all is just rude. It is ill-mannered. Only the Chinese people from mainland China do this when they are abroad. If they are so concerned about the communist way of life, they should have stayed in their country and must not travel abroad to learn from others.

If those students were back in China watching a presentation and someone said Taiwan is part of China and they jumped up and said "No Taiwan is an independent nation" what would happen to them? We know the answer very well.

If the Chinese students are enjoying the free speech allowed in UK, they should have the decency to let the Japanese students do the same.

It is unfortunate that the professor did not discipline the offenders (Chinese students) and let the presentation continue. Western universities are the grounds for exchanging potentially controversial ideas and expanding on the prosperity of knowledge for humanity. Obviously the Chinese students missed that orientation session and should be appropriately disciplined and informed of their role and responsibility as a student.

What courage this Japanese student displayed to stand up in front of all those mainland Chinese students and assert Taiwan's right to determine its own destiny, especially after the violent attack at the Manchester consulate! So the question become why show this off knowing you'd get in trouble because back home in china there families just got a social credit score boost due to their actions. This is why china is so dangerous and any chinese outside china are sadly a threat to the counties there in. The social credit score weaponizes the entire Chinese population to do the chinese government bidding.

To the Chinese students at a University in the United Kingdom, free speech is not a protected right when they tried to interfere with a presentation by a Japanese student saying that Taiwan is a country with its flag. They can't accept the notion of freedom of speech even after being exposed to western education. Everyone can see that these Chinese students have been brainwashed since birth.

Obviously these Chinese students are not independent thinkers but have been brainwashed by the Chinese Communist party line and "planted" as influencers at institutions all around the world. So why on earth are they allowed to study at a British university, or any university for that matter, where independent thinking is supposedly promoted? If these Chinese plants can't tolerate this Japanese student's presentation they should be ousted from the university, period, as they are politically motivated and are therefore a serious threat to honest discourse.

You know, I'm thinking of one of the last scenes of The Hunger Games Part 4 where Woody Harrelsons character says that (paraphrasing) "we will enter that period of time where we are tired of war and all agree to move into an age of Peace. Until the next time when we move on have kids then repeat the same mistakes that started a war in the first place."

I'm afraid that we are to far gone from WWII, too many of those who fought that war are passing every day and our schools don't teach the real horrors of War, our kids are desensitized by constant barrage of Fighting games and movies that to them its just not real.

The next 10 years will be surreal.

Hello West, since 1976 Chinese students are here and are followed by agents. Many are agents. Why not reduce the number of CCCP China students to the equivalent number of students studying in China. Also they can study anything but sciences here. Art, music, humanities and liberal arts. I bet the CCCP doesn't send anyone but spies for that liberal curriculum.
We need to get realistic that the CCCP is the driver of every Chinese education initiative. Accept, an equivalent number of Tawain students to fill the void and upset Chairman Xi.

This kind of behaviour has been going on in many universities around the world, especially in Australia, where the CCP students seem to control speech on campuses. It is part of the CCP's strategy to intimidate and even physically attack those who go against the CCP political line. It has to be stopped. Those students involved should be deported, or even prosecuted for violence.

Those Chinese students should be ashamed of themselves. By the time I reached college age I had no problem speaking my mind. I would have gotten up and put the Chinese students in their place, walked down to the Taiwanese student and put my arm around him. Then walk out of the classroom with him/her. No, I'm not Chinese or Japanese or Taiwanese. I'm Italian American and I would have stuck up for that Japanese student. The teacher or professor should have reprimanded the Chinese students. It is time for the Taiwanese people and their government to THINK of their island as a separate nation and act like it. Taiwan and China for 3 generations now have diverged so much in political life, political philosophy, culture, economic activity, alliances, that they are already functioning as 2 separate nations.

To that end, Taiwan has to revise their constitution and remove any language or notion that they are one nation and that the Taiwan government is the sovereign government of ALL of China. It is now laughable to think of tiny Taiwan being able to storm back onto the mainland and topple the Beijing government with its 2 million man military.

In the near term, China will not change its behavior one whit. It will still belligerently claim Taiwan is merely a rogue province and should meekly return to the Motherland. But in the long term, Taiwan will be freer diplomatically and seek treaties and trade agreements to further cement its independent status.

The US and all the western nations will no longer have to tippy-toe around what to call Taiwan or treat Taiwan without offending China.

The US must defend Taiwan's independent status. Taiwan is the world's foremost producer of computer chips, including the AI chips that have been instrumental in Ukraine's fight with Russia. Our military, computer industry, all major corporations depend on advanced AI chips. If that technology ever fell under the control of Beijing, the US would suffer.

What the heck was the teacher doing at the time? Smoke break? The Chinese response isn't in the least a surprise. 98% of them are on auto-pilot, after 18 - 20 years of indoctrination and brainwashing. The only thing rarer than a dissenter is a Chinese university student able to produce an original idea. (By the way, yes, I am an English teacher, too, both in the USA, Hong Kong, and China, and have had to deal with hundreds of students just like the Taiwan-deniers of this article). Any Region where the majority of people that live there declare a right to self-governance should be recognized. Other nations making properties of these people where they live should not have any such claim recognized. It's pretty much that ethically simple. The law of the land should not ever be separated from the people that abide on that land.

These nations attempting to force the occupants rightfully living and abiding in lands they have possessed for generations are nothing more than thieves. That would include China in the case Taiwan and Russia in the case of Ukraine. Anyone attempting to conquer any land through force and violence is a criminal against the whole of humanity.

That it has occurred in the past without negative consequence to the thieves, does not justify evil to those that currently commit it. It all must stop. Just stop.

There was an article today stating China has passed the US with the largest amount of top University's. Guess these students missed that message and have been going to inferior University's outside of the mother land. Since they feel so empowered to keep others from talking and giving presentations, perhaps they should pack up and return home where they can enjoy their beliefs with the rest of them. In the mean time the rest of the free world will continue with free speech, especially in a University. Don't know what the Chinese word is for good bye, but don't let the door hit ya in the rear on your way out. You won't be missed.

Something to learn from it: Chinese students and citizens have been well informed and well taught about their own politics and history as well. And their patriotism is of a sterling quality and so ready to defend their nation and national identity. In this case, their stance as well as response to the presentation is "Taiwan is a part of China", which is quite legal and constructive.

I wondered what class this took place at? was it a history class, or a social science class? But in any case, the professor/teacher should have stepped in and told the students, that technically, no country on Earth currently recognize Taiwan as a country. There are some 17 countries that recognize the Republic of China, the government on Taiwan as the legitimate government of China. Many people use the term 'self governing' [province] to describe Taiwan, but not a country per se.

It is irrelevant how you may feel, the simple fact is that pretty much every country in the world has confirmed since about 1950 that Taiwan is part of China. And so is Hongkong.
Just like the USA did not allow the southern states to separate from the United States, China does not allow a separation of Taiwan. The difference is that the USA fought a civil war to keep the southern states within the Union, losing millions of lives in the process. While China is still willing to accomplish this without violence. Though they do reserve the right to do what the Federal Government did in the USA, and that is to use force.

If you love China so much, then why are you in a college in the UK? Why didn't you go to a university in China?

I recently graduated from college, and being older, I was really shocked at how unprofessional instructors are. They were like the low life students, using foul and vulgar language, and did a horrible job teaching. It seemed like they were only there to collect a paycheck. The only instructor who had a professional demeanor, was an older man who taught our electronics math class.

Red China has lost 2,687 pilots trying to do Carrier Landings. They watch the movie TOP GUN for hours trying to figure it out. Then they go out and fly and when they hit the deck you can hear them screaming as they slide off the deck and tumble into the sea. President Xi Jinping said," GOOD GOLLY MISS MOLLY,,,WE NEED EM MORE PILOTS!!!"

Chinese people are really infantile when you disagree with them about Taiwan. They can't handle other viewpoints like adults

There's no winners. The CCP has them so horribly brainwashed they're willing to do and say terrible things.

Hopefully these Chinese students were forced to drop the class, lose the credits, and course fees with a warning that recurrences in the classroom will result in expulsion. Direct them to Hyde Park Speakers Corner. Characterizing these disruptions in classrooms as rude is ridiculous.

The Chinese students do not know what free speech is and once they go back home, they will never experience it. Too bad but that is China for you.
